Please limit the number of roosters to 5 and change the conditions on how they are sheltered. Cock fighting operations are criminal and must be eradicated. This is a good start.
Thank you for your vigilance regarding animal welfare..

Thank you.

We support adoption of the Rooster Ordinance. We appreciate the hard work of folk in Cebada Canyon where this issue was first identified. The ordinance will make it possible for Colson & Tepusquet Canyon residents to prevent development of the same problems near our homes.

We suggest that the Board

- reduce the number of roosters to 5 per parcel. (Neighbors will line up to thank you for protecting their ability to sleep at night.)
- require humane caging conditions (Yeah, these are 'just chickens' but every creature deserves humane treatment.)

Dear Santa Barbara County Supervisors,

I would like to comment on the prospective Rooster Ordinance. I have kept several roosters over the years that I have lived in Cebada Canyon, but only one at a time since they will fight to become that 1 rooster to that flock of hens. It is hard to understand how certain of our neighbors have been allowed to house many roosters on their properties in small cages next to each other, The resulting continuous crowing has driven longtime residents from their homes, lowering the property value since no one wants to live with more than 1 rooster next door, except for those who can find a way to make money feeding into the illegal blood-sport of cockfighting. Why should raising 20 roosters be allowed in our EDRN when their only use is illegal activity. I suppose someone could be raising heirloom breeds of chickens for preservation of genetic diversity and living agricultural history. That farmer would have a full complement of hens to make the venture possible. Of course someone might raise young male chickens for meat, but I would think that person would harvest them prior to, or shortly after, sexual maturity (and crowing behavior). Yes, cockfighting is allowed in Mexico, but I'm pretty sure they are not being exported.

Yours sincerely,
