platforms. Originally from the capital city of Venezuela, Caracas, the singer, songwriter and guitarist creates music that is a direct reflection of her love for her country. Her soulful voice communicates passion and love through the strength and power of her lyrics.

This album, which was produced, mixed and mastered by Jim White, Paul Fonfara, and John Keane, shares her struggles through homesickness for her family back in Venezuela. The album features covers of Venezuelan folk songs that remedy that homesickness with vocal depth that take these classical folk tunes to a new audience.

"Despechada" has already captured the hearts of Joaquin Phoenix, Michael Stipe of R.E.M. and Rufus Wainwright. The album results in a nostalgic journey through Ms. Diaz's heritage as she honors her memories of Venezuela.

She has released other songs and EPs in the past few years, most notably "Carmela," "Pueblos Tristes," "Los Ejes de Mi Carreta" and "Venezuela."

Her lyrical prowess is impressive, but her visuals throughout her album covers and music videos are also something to marvel at.

In her song "Carmela," the music video is generated by artificial intelligence with hypnotic vocals and a loop of faces and images all representing her native country. All of her music videos are similar in nature.

The singer and songwriter's 11-acre agave ranch in Montecito has been operating since 2019.

Ms. Diaz and partner Mark Peterson have grown several varieties of agave: salmiana, salmiana var. ferrox, arroyo, toballa, americana, guadalajara, papalome, desmetiana, karwinski, coyote and tequilana.

State conducts far fewer controlled burns than target lot of preparation and readiness for the fire season, the Sierra Club suggests that California needs more prescribed burns as an effective way to prevent out-of-control wildfires.

Scott Rodd, investigative reporter at KPBS News and author of several Capradio articles on forest fires gone awry, stated in an NPR interview "... fire experts I spoke to say ... the state needs to do close to a million acres of fire mitigation every year. And we're nowhere near that right now."

The Sierra Club reports in November of last year that former governor Jerry Brown set a plan in May 2018 to burn 500,000 acres of wildlands each year by 2023 but in March 2022 "the state lowered that target to 400,000 acres per year by 2025, possibly because the actual acres burned each year were closer to a quarter of the new goal."

The governor's statement released on May 3, for Wildfire Preparedness Week said "CAL FIRE treated approximately 110,925 acres across more than 600 projects last fiscal year in preparation for wildfire season, exceeding the state's goal of treating 100,000 acres by 2025." This is well under the 500,000-acre target set by Mr. Brown and approximately 1/10 of the recommended one million acre controlled burn.

Controlled burns as a means of preventing wildfires apparently are still not a priority in a state that has seen 7,534,403 acres burned last year.

A report on the Grizzly Flats Fire of 2021 show that despite a fire mitigation plan, the US Forest Service was unable to complete the plan, "... a slew of hurdles stood in the way of the project's completion: limited funding, pushback from environmentalists and fewer opportunities to complete essential prescribed burns due to staff shortages and climate change."

The governor warned that wildfires are still a threat to California even though the state has had record breaking rainfall earlier this year.

"Having a wet year doesn't mean that we're out of the woods when it comes to wildfires. Be aware and stay prepared," the governor advised.
